Mountain bike racing comes to the KP

By Rick Sorrels, KP News

Wheels give people mobility and freedom; car wheels for teens, bicycle wheels for pre-teens and tweens.

Local roads and drivers can get scary, especially when vehicles and bikes mix. Where can children (young and old) ride safely? Try the 360 Park on SR-302 at 144th Street.

Wheels were spinning and muscles were pumping last month, as hundreds of bicyclists flocked to Key Peninsula's 360 Park for a day of safe family fun, competition and camaraderie.

A series of mountain bike races were held at 360 Park on March 10. The three major divisions were beginners, sport (intermediate) and expert. Each division had sub-classes for age (under 18, 19-29, 30-39, 40-49 and more than 50), male or female, single or multi-speed and physically fit or "Clydesdale."

Bicycle racing brings to mind BMX (20-inch) bikes flying through the air at parks or stadiums. Mountain bikes are different. They are bigger (26-to 29-inch rims), heavier (up to 25 pounds), more gears (10 to 30) and are ridden more sedately, without tricks over paths on rough terrain with lots of natural obstacles and slopes and switchbacks.

Rory and Deanna Muller, through their business, BuDu Racing, have been developing bicycle racing events in Western Washington from Port Gamble and Seattle to Portland for the past 10 years. They ran 44 events last year between February and September. An associate, Courtland Capwell, volunteers to develop the race tracks.
